Vocabulary for the college bound student chapter 6 pdf printable

But just in case you missed the boat, here are ten great ways you can completely waste your summer vacation: Breaking the world record for most consecutive hours playing Call of Duty. Visiting and exploring foreign places will broaden your horizons, allowing you to expand your awareness of other peoples and cultures. Colleges will be impressed by applicants who can effectively use social media for productive purposes. So instead of encouraging the exploitation of young children, work to improve their situation through community service and volunteer work. Cryostasis / Flickr It almost goes without saying that campus visits should be part of any college applicant's summer plans. Watching cat videos on YouTube. Well, not exactly. Colleges don't expect to see you pulling 60-hour work weeks and 3,000 hours of community service in one summer. This will not only look great on your transcript, but it also provides an opportunity to get a jump start on general education requirements for college and allows you to explore possible career options. A few campus tours don't constitute a summer's worth of experience; they should be included in your plans, along with other resume-building activities and experiences, in order to set you apart from your fellow applicants. Community service is another great way to gain some valuable work and leadership experience. Perhaps you are an older adult looking to go back to school after working for a few years. That much time in bed means you haven't found anything meaningful to do to get you out of bed. Students focus on one class per term, allowing them to immerse themselves in each subject.St. John's CollegeRather than choose a major, all students at St. John's College follow the Great Books Program. Try to find something that motivates you. Robert Deutschman/Getty Images While this may not be a viable option for everyone, summer travel can be an exciting way to enrich your mind while enhancing your resume. Local community colleges also offer credit-bearing summer courses for high school juniors and seniors on a variety of introductory-level topics. If you create some of your own clever and high-quality viral videos, they can become part of the supplemental materials for your college application. And even if art is just a side interest, you can often submit a portfolio as a supplement to your college application. Nonprofits such as soup kitchens and animal shelters are always looking for volunteers, so it shouldn't be difficult to find a volunteer organization near you that could use an extra pair of hands for a few hours a week during the summer. Your future health will thank you, and there really are a lot of better things you can do with your time outdoors, like lifeguarding or teaching kids to swim. Your plans can be more than simply getting a summer job; there are a number of activities that can help you stay active and gain valuable experience over the summer months. There are a variety of options available for high school students to take summer courses, both at their own schools and at local colleges. Of course, while these visits are a priority when considering which colleges to apply to, it is important to remember that they should be just one part of your summer equation. Even if working during the school year is not an option, there are often seasonal establishments such as residential summer camps that look for help specifically during the summer months. Of course, summer can't be all work and no play, and it's important to find a balance between having fun and being productive. That is unless you're using social media for a noble cause or entrepreneurial endeavor. The more a job challenges you, the more it builds the skills that colleges and future employers are interested in seeing in applicants. If your high school offers summer classes, this could be a great way to advance your math or language skills, two areas that often fall short on college applications. Memorizing the lyrics to every song on Billboard's Top 40 (this will not convince any college to "call you, maybe.")
